

Secrets to a good night's sleep

Safety Systems, Training, and the Importance of Human Error

The Mining Industry Skills Centre presents the 2010 Hypothetical sessions facilitated by John Tate, Executive Legal Consultant – Department of Justice

Following on from the Mining Industry Skills Centre's highly successful Hypothetical on What is Competence in 2009, the Skills Centre is running a series of sessions on the importance of aligning training and the ever-present issue of human error upon highly functioning safety systems.

The first Hypothetical session for 2010- Secrets to a good night's sleep – will focus on:

- Prediction, risk and probability - the unseen input of the training system
- The role of risk, training and safety management systems in productive and safe workplaces
- How safety systems can fail, and the impact of human error on production and safety
- Competent training systems as a required statutory outcome; and
- Safety regulatory systems and the requirement to keep workers safe

Coming away from this session you will have an awareness of:

- The importance of examining your training system to identify and mitigate risk
- The part played by modern fatality and significant incident investigation methods in understanding system failure and the impact of human error on systems
- How training and development systems underpin productive and safe workplaces; and
- Trends in testing the effectiveness of your training system within the regulatory context

Sessions are limited to 50 attendees- be quick to register so you don't miss out!
